Swiss retro rock band Jack Slamer has now been on the road for 20 years. In that time, the band has played countless shows and released four studio albums, two of them on the renowned metal label Nuclear Blast. Now they are back with their fifth full-length album.

“Mask Of Broken Glass” is the name of the beast, and it will be released on 27 November 2026 via Radicals. For the production, the band travelled to Brittany, where the album was created in just ten days at the legendary Kerwax Studios.

Recorded entirely analogue to tape and played live in one room, refined with a few select overdubs and mixed on a custom-built console with equipment from the 1930s to the 1970s, the ten-track record hits with full force: sophisticated songwriting, plenty of attitude and the raw energy of a great live band – a concentrated dose of heavy rock’n’roll.

Stay tuned, it’s only Rock’n’Roll but it feels damn good!
